“ I’m not sure if anyone will see this but I know it’ll make my heart feel even better. It’s been nearly two years since loosing my best friend. No one would know me because I am from Maine, that has made the grieving process a lot harder. I don’t have anyone to talk to that knows him besides other friends from different states. The man I met in Maine was an amazing human. I’m lucky enough that I got to love him fully during our time together. Kyle was one of the best partners I could have ever had. He made me feel seen, heard, and understood. His hugs were spine crushing. No one ever spoke to me with as much respect and care as Kyle did. I finally came to see him, I’m doing a cross country trip with our dog. Taz misses you like crazy, I know he wishes dad would come home and take him on a walk already. I miss you so much Kyle, and I love you till the end of time. I hope you like your spiderman. Merry Christmas my love, and to all the people that loved my best friend.

“ Kyle’s been on my mind for the last few months. I never thought I’d find him this way. I was friends with Kyle during college in Richland Center. I found him sitting on a park bench one day and he said he didn’t have a place to sleep that night. So I let him crash at my family’s house. I’m glad I did - he clearly did so much to support other people, I’m glad I could help him. I’m so grieved that he’s gone. He was such a kind soul.

“ Kyle has been family to me for 15 years and I am beyond thankful for the time I got to know him. No one encourages or believes in you like Kyle did. We started as gym friends and classmates but He popped in and out of my life in some of the most bizarre and chaotic ways. I'll never forget him walking into my apartment on accident after 3 years of long distance friendship. Or him complimenting my Batman shirt at a party without realizing who I was until I threw my arms around him. Thankful for all the “meet me for coffee”s and “hey check out this new thing I can do”s. Sad he lived far away for the last few years but thankful for the continued friendship. We were all so lucky to know him. Love and sympathy to all who are hurting

This is the oldest picture I can find of us. He came to Easter Sunday with my family just because I asked if he wanted to.

Miss you friend <3

“ Kyle and I have been close friends since 2019. He was loved deeply. Not, just me, but everyone who was in his life, including animals that happened to cross his path. He appreciated, respected and proudly cared about people. Life is a struggle and he connected with that and found small ways to make everyone know they were loved. His enthusiasm was contagious and I got a mace in the mail to enjoy his new workouts with him . Lol
He didnt watch much tv, but he subscribed to everything, I think it was just to be able to share with all of us. That's Kyle. He shared every step of his journey with me over these years. He was very funny supportive, genuine, honest and his integrity was never compromised in any situation. He was a good male role model for my sons whom he would video chat when they were very young and I was new to being a single mother so i could have a quick shower. 2000 miles away and a closed border and he found ways to be more helpful than anyone close to me. He was one of my best friends. He loved and cherished everyone and that was one of the things I loved most about him. I am not sure how to do things without him. I miss him so much.

“ I cannot muster the right words to fully describe the heartache of his loss.

He was my friend, my first kiss, my heart. Our 20s saw us on different paths, but I'm glad to have reconnected with him in the last few years. I enjoyed the man he'd become and relished in being his friend all over again. He was honestly the best at making me laugh. I'll keep his funny photos, snaps, and voice clips with me till the end of time.

My deepest sympathies and biggest hugs go to Kyle's friends and family located all over the world. He is forever in our hearts. <3

“ We met the Kohler's when we moved to Liberty Township. Tom walked up to introduce himself, not long after, our kids met and became friends. One of the first times the Kohler gang spent the night at our house I walked into my kitchen to find Kyle looking in cabinets. Don't remember what he was looking for but he made me laugh...he felt at home enough to "help himself" in looking for, well something.

To the family of Kyle. I'm so very sorry for your lost. As a young adult I had the privilege to be a wrestling coach for Kyle. At that time we had many conversations and I watched him grow as a good person. I will miss him and carry him in prayer. May he now rest in peace. Stan Dugenske
