“Phil Goedeke was my father and an extraordinary man. I went with him to his 11th Airborne reunion and how extraordinary man he was. Whenever he was asked by us what he did that he received a silver Star. His standard reply was that he he was in the wrong place at the right time. At I met a good buddy of his from the war. I had a chance to talk to him about it and he told m. My father operated a big gun that took sleeves of bullets. He had just got back when his buddy 's patrol was going on their patrol since he did have it and ammo. They encountered a company of Japanese, not a patrol. His buddy was wounded and he carried him out on his back while fingering his gun while getting his buddy on his back to safety. The next patrol came back, astonished at the number of Japanese he killed. They were upset that it was a Silver Star and not a Medal of Honor. My father had a different outlook on it. He said "I did it for my buddies, not a metal.".He lost a finger and damage to other fingers as a result.
